We went hear on a Friday night. It was very busy. We needed a table for 4, but only 2 of us had arrived. No problem, they let us sit and helped us coordinate the order so it worked as the other half of the group arrived a short while after. Great vibe. Nice staff. Not the same old options. I think they are still working out a few kinks being new, but we will definitely be back. I could see this becoming our go to pizza place.

This place is freaking awesome. Their pizzas are some of the BEST I have ever had and they're not expensive. The desserts are also really delicious - they have many ice cream based ones and the spumoni is the best spumoni I've had. They also have a nice wine selection. The service is also excellent - Alex was super gracious and made us feel so welcome.

I'm definitely coming back even though I don't live anywhere near here.

I'm not a huge fan of doling out poor reviews for places. They have to be especially well deserved. I felt like this was justified based on my previous experience, but everyone deserves a second chance. And what if the 'za was insanely good? How could I not know?

A long time ago (college) in a land a far away (orange country), there was a pizza joint by the beach that I would frequent regular especially in the midst of a drunken stupor. It wasn't especially authentic pizza, but hot damn did the quality of the ingredients and generous toppings keep me coming back for more. Biting into a slice from the Pink Onion reminded me so much of that place and hit me right in the feels.

I ordered the House Salad and Bruce Bochy. Especially good was the crust, which had an great smokiness that reminded me of something like a Grimaldis, and roasted garlic toppings, which was generously applied. It's definitely a solid pie made that's made with quality ingredients and worth your time. I'll definitely be back to try something else.

The establishment is pretty small and not particularly interesting though, so I wouldn't necessarily recommend the trip especially when you can order through all the food delivery apps.

takeout. We ordered as takeout, and everything transported very well!

Our Combo Meal: Vegetarian Style Burrata (appetizer), Il Pesto di Pistachio (pasta), Nayalita (pizza), and cheesecake (dessert).

All of the food was delicious. The pizza is a hand-tossed style (I was expecting thinner).

Monday and Tuesday are take out only. Wednesday to Sunday is open for dine-in, and you can make reservations via Yelp.

I stumbled upon this spot with a friend of mine one day after riding our bikes around and then stopping in a block away at Standard Deviant brewing and decided we needed something to eat.

We ordered the Luka Modric which was something different then I have seen in a while. This pizza is made with roasted artichoke and garlic cream base, goat cheese, mozzarella, olives and prosciutto and they work soo well together. Since we wanted to try more that one thing we only ordered a small of that and then proceeded with a pasta order which was the Pesto Di Pistachio and that pasta was knocked out of the park. The sauce was super creamy and a little nutty which added that nice tiny bit of crunch/texture change in every bite.

Now with service, nothing I can say bad about it, we sat at one of the small tables out side and was checked on every so often and topped off our waters when needed in a timely manner. Good solid small spot to check out for some different types of pizzas and some good pasta.

I've lived in SF for four years now (which I've heard makes you a native...), how did I not know about this place!?! One reason for the proliferation of globalization is the philosophy that people desire uniformity. I don't think this is true, and if it is it's the kind of reaction that doesn't exist in our wonderful town; another reason we all live here despite the crazy rent, the day laborers that cat call at me on my corner every day (except Sunday), enforced chanting in yoga classes, and the weather.

The Sausage Factory is such a microcosm of the city, historic, eclectic, and such a character. Inside is a hodgepodge of Victorian prints, mirrors, and wallpaper, with nooks and crannies lining the back room; concealing private dinning tables. It is so sensational that I was devoted to loving it even before I ordered my food. This has gotten me in trouble in the past, but not this night. Exactly the kind of place to go when you just want a plate of spaghetti, or similar, and some wine. You can't expect Delfina, or a trattoria, it ain't that kinda show. The food is what I imagine you would eat if you were in the the movie "A Bronx Tale". The symbolic possibilities of this place are unreal; almost every part of it could be exactly what you imagine some other experience being. Our waitress (here they're definitely "waitresses", and not "servers") was very friendly and efficient, a real pro. She could whip any of the "servers" I've encountered who seem to care more about repping how cool they are and where they work, rather than the actual nuts and bolts of feeding people and allowing them to enjoy themselves. Boyfriend and I were here for a late night dinner on what was coincidentally Valentine's Day (we had celebrated on Friday night, see Jardiniere review), and the vibe was cozy and friendly. I'll admit that I usually avoid the Castro because of the conspicuous consumption that has become so much of gay culture, but places like the Sausage Factory allow another side of the story which is just as much about community, friendship and history.

My family of three (2 adults with a young toddler) were in the mood for some pizza and a quiet dinner, and we decided to try The Sausage Factory. We hadn't been to the restaurant in awhile, and we were thrilled that we chose this restaurant.

As soon as we entered the restaurant we knew we had picked the right place. A friendly server greeted us and helped pick the perfect table for the three of us (a quiet booth where we could safely surround our toddler from making any escapes into the restaurant).

valueFeat

Our server was delightful and knew all the right tricks to serving a toddler (small glasses, partially filled, accompanied with a straw).

To eat we decided on a Fatt Mike's large pizza. At first I was hesitant to try a pizza at The Sausage Factory, because if I wanted pizza, there are a handful of pizzerias in the neighborhood that have plenty to offer. However, this pizza was perfect for our family. Not only was the dough cooked to perfection, but the blend of high-quality cheese and ingredients made for a scrumptious dinner. I assumed we would take a small box home, but when one slice was left on the platter, we decided it was best to eat the slice while it was fresh and be sure to come back and visit again soon.

The Sausage Factory is a neighborhood gem with lots of reviews, and I stand behind my 5-star review. It's a delightful restaurant with great food and pleasant ambiance.

TLDR: this place is goood. the service is goood. can't go wrong.

So my friends and I were walking around the Castro and craving pizza so we were on the hunt. We came across this place and the name alone drew us in ~lol~ but we also were sat right away and had a nice table outside.

We could not pick all of the pizzas looked so good so we asked the waiter for a recommendation between the tonys pizza and Gigi's. He recommended Gigi's, which is the one we really wanted anyways, so we were happy. It was DELICIOUS. Our other friends just got the margherita which they said was just fine, nothing amazing. So I def recommend getting the Gigi's, ALSO get the CHEESY BREAD - the fact that there's no photo of it speaks for itself. We ate it too fast to get a pic.

If you're in the Castro looking for pizza, head on down to the sausage factory
